Dear Mr. Mondadori:

Le ribat

A lady in Rome says that she had a vision in which my wife appeared and told her to write a continuation of my wife's novel "Gone With the Wind". A friend of the lady, Dottor Antonio Limongelli, Via Stasira, 21, Rome, wrote to the New York publishers of my wife's novel, The Macmillan Company, about this. Macmillan forwarded the correspondence to me.

Enclosed, I am sending you copies of the correspondence.
Naturally I have told the lady that she must not write a sequel, either for publication -- or for private circulation. This was the answer consistently given by Mrs. Marsh to every similar requests during her lifetime. She felt that the writing of a sequel by some stranger was not only an infringement of her rights, but would be damaging to the asset value of the original novel. If you should hear anything further about this continuation being written or published or privately circulated, please let me hear as promptly as possible. If legal action must be taken, I would not hesitate to take it.

Alberto Mondadori

Sincerely yours,

John R. Marsh
